

POORLY PLAnned COMics

PPC Trivia:
Gon and Zoop have the same last name.

It's exactly what you would guess it is.

If Gon and Zoop were to dress as "█"—

—which they could easily pull off—

—and then EAT a bowl of "█"—

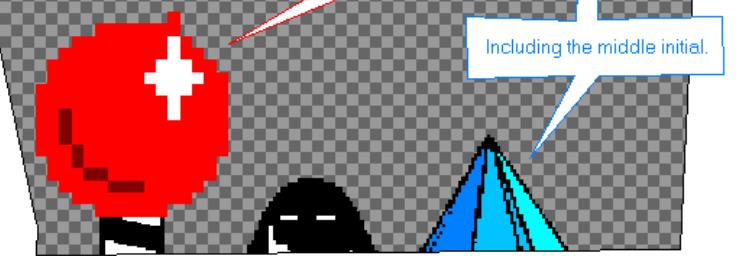

—same phrase—

—and you asked "who are you supposed to be?",
and Gon replied "█", with his mouth full—

—same referent, different phrase;
in quotes for a different reason—

—you might think he was saying his own name.

Including the middle initial.

Also, if you add an █ to his name, it becomes a reference to a character that's banned on TV in █

But DON'T add an █ to his name, because it would fuck up the anagrams we're about to do (pardon my french).

Zoop's middle initial also makes his name into a pun about a cartoon character, one who's associated with a particular letter.

But not a relevant letter.

Though you MIGHT say the letter that IS relevant is the COLOP of the nose... A DOLINDLE irrelevant letter.

With their middle initials included, Gon and Zoop's names anagram to crossword-clue descriptions of their respective comedic roles in an obscene form of improvisational puppet theater.

I like how you interrupted my confusing hint with an even more confusing one.

Just ignore her. As you might guess based on the initials, Gon and Zoop's middle names are "█" and "█".

Respectively.

No, not respectively!

Seriously though, how do you expect them to get that puppet theater one? The solution would just look like random words to them.

They already know they're looking for a one-to-many relationship that combines metaphysics and cryptography; if they didn't, I could just say
"Zoop is the orchard and Gon is The Bride".

now the only question
there is to ask,, is why?

TT: They're supposedly heavily allegorical. Veiled representations of cosmic events surrounding the witch and her boss and how all this came about.

TT: It's the kind of thing you wouldn't pick up on unless you were someone who understood what happened, like the Condesce, which was kind of the point. I think it was her way of letting the witch know, "I'm on to you."

TT: In the early days of the resistance movement they both opposed her more indirectly, through their art, like critics of tyrannical governments often used to.

TT: They had to be careful. Didn't want to make big waves too early.

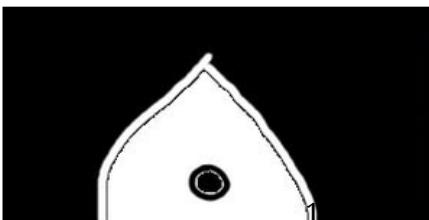

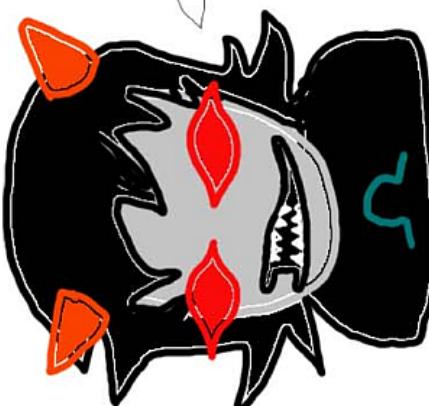

TT: My bro did this too with his many fine films.

TT: Practically everything was a symbol for something. Either in mockery of the batterwitch, or conveying some hidden message to its audience. Each film was always rigorously picked apart for its head-scratching symbolic meaning.

TT: But he managed to accomplish all that without ever compromising the purity of his ironic vision, which I think was admirable.

Or are we just trying to agitate Jack into making a move? You know who Jack is? He's Justin Bailey, he's Pickle Inspector, and he's the pederast governor who pays Griffith for sex.

Ben Heaton
No, it was a different image. I think it might be that two-sided one from before, that looks different in different browsers.
I didn't test this, because it's not like what's going on here is communication.

Honestly, the most painful part to watch was when he tried to convince himself/others that this is completely different from the usual.
Talking about having read a lot of people going off the deep end, and it was never anything this special or meaningful.

one or two conversations into the last series of talkings i had with jack, i had the strong sensation of being in the presence of a "prophet", not necessarily a dude who actually knew anything about anything, but someone convincingly of that profession, and it really disturbed me

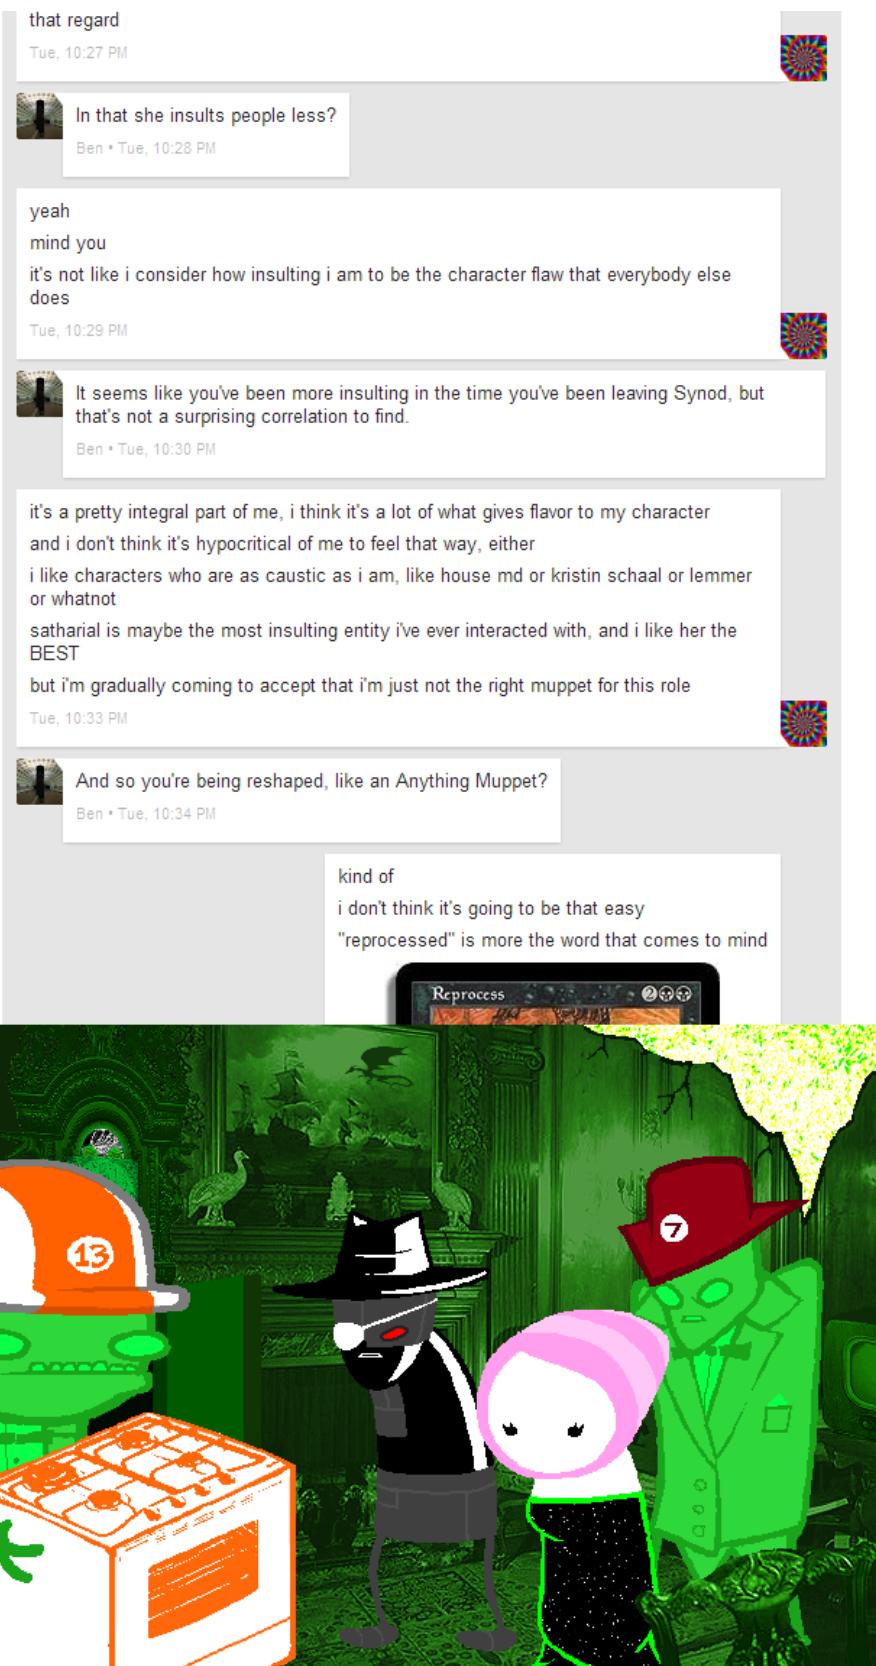

Who understands with me best ?

when i ask people why they won't engage with me, they never say it's because they're offended or their feelings are hurt, it's always sixteen other things, but presumably this is yet another emotional reaction i have to consciously remind myself to check if other people might be having and look for the subtle signs of in amongst their apathy and indecision and self-deception and inattention and cowardice and stupidity...

Magnus Nørgaard

this is the guy who wrote the paper, louis crane
 i confronted him with the fact that sexual reproduction proved P = NP and he stuttered and dropped his chalk, which broke on the floor

Ashley Sgromo
 does it indeed?

Ben
 Probably not.

Magnus Nørgaard
 you know what i mean though, right?

Ashley Sgromo
 no, sorry

Ben
 No. I mean, I know you're talking about sexual reproduction of universes, through black hole whatsit.

Magnus Nørgaard
 it falls out naturally from the ideas in his paper and the stuff scott aaronson was on about recently regarding the black hole firewall paradox octopus thing confusingly, crane's medusa metaphor is not a reference to pegasus ponies being born from the blood of medusa after perseus sliced her head off, but to the medusid stage in the lifecycle of jellyfish, yet it has nothing to do with the octopus model of black hole hawking radiation being the dual form of the internal wormhole, that's a totally different metaphorical octopus from the metaphorical jellyfish in crane's metaphor, the jellyfish are us, we're the 48 squiddles he doesn't use the term squiddle because homestuck hadn't been invented his idea is basically that if black holes bud off new universes, the universe we live in would probably be one that's really good at making black holes, and that furthermore, the fact that it's also good at supporting intelligent life is probably not a coincidence, that organic life and black holes / universes are actually two very different-looking stages in the life cycle of the same organism

Ben
<http://angryflower.com/682.html>

Magnus NÅrgaard

the thing is, this model seems to have the universes reproducing asexually, the new ones budding off all just going on their separate ways, never to meet again and asexual reproduction is inferior to sexual reproduction, so if it were possible, it would be selected for but the only way it IS possible is to entangle the black holes such that there is a traversable wormhole between them, and, due to results of various people recently whose names i don't recall, this is only possible if P = NP otherwise, although the entanglement does RESULT in a wormhole, it grows too fast to be traversable, if alice and bob jump in different ends, they can't even meet in the middle

the length of the wormhole grows in direct proportion with the quantum circuit depth of the black hole
